THURSDAY EVENING. JUNE 21.

Sir Walter Scott.

In some portions of the world May is considered an unpropitious month for matrimony, and this opinion is strongly held in Scotland. Walter Scott was a very sensible man, and yet he could not resist the power of such a notion. This was shown in the marriage of his daughter Sophia to John G. Lockhart. The author had important engagements in London while the wedding was in preparation, and it was ap pointed the last day (but one in April. Scott left his London business unfinished at a time when a delay of a week would have been of great value, merely in obedience to a national superstition. This union, however, was not fortunate in the general result. The Lockharts had but one son, a sickly boy, who died at the age of ten years, and Sophia did not long survive him. She left a daughter who u arried John Hope. He took the name of Scott, and be came the proprietor of Abbottsford. Walter Scott was married on Christmas eve, 1797, the bride being Miss Jane Carpen tier (or Carpenter), an beiress of French birth The marriage was not felicitous, especially in view of her mental inferiority, which was a life long appropriate to the author. This feature was inherited by their four children, all of whom were far below mediocrity in point of brain activity. The eldest son was gled to get a clerkship under the government, which was his highest attaioment. The eldest daughter, Sophia, was the brightest of the children, but never left anything on record to suggest that she was the daughter of a genius. The young-est daughter, Aane, like her brother Charles, died unmarried. She was a frail creature, and was dreadfully shattered by the rule which fell upon her father's fortunes. After his death she went to London, became a member of Lockhart's family, and died there, less than a year after her father. A pension from the King gave her a support, and thus the daughter of the greatest author of the age died an object of royal charity. The fact that the widow of the second Walter has recently died in London, suggests a brief allusion to her name and character. The sec oud Walter Scott was of noble form and vacant head. His father placed him in the army, and the youth made the most of the family name and personal appearance by marrying an heiress. The latter was Miss Jenny Johnson, proprietor of the estate of Lochore. She was inferior in stature and also in personal appearance. but her wealth was sufficient attraction. The "happy pair" went to Dublin, where the husband's regiment wasquarrered. Soon after the latter began to firt with the ladies, and, as this came to his father's knowledge, he sent him some sensible advice. The jealousy of the bride became awakened, and the union, according to report, never was harmonious. We thus see that these three marriages, none of which date in this unfortunate month, were decidedly unsuccessful. The second Sir Walter died cildless, and the sole representative of the author's line is his great grand daughter Monics, who was born in 1852, and who still lives at Abbottsford. Her mother, Mrs. Hope Scott (Lockhart's daugh ter,) died in 1858. It is sad to see how Sir Walter Scott was disappointed in all his children, and also in his grand residence, Abbotts ford. He was twelve years perfecting this es tablishment, and tailed two years after it might have been called a finished place. Only twice was Abbottsford opened to its full capacity during his life. The first of these was the entertainment given in honor of his son's marriage the second was the funeral of his wife, which took place soon afterward.

A WOMAN'S HOARDINGS .- Miss Joanna Farnham, who recently died at the American House in Beston, aged 80 years, had long been housekeeper there, but was supposed to be very poor. When her truck was opened, however, it was found to contain a variety of dry goods, notes for $5,000 against the proprietor of the American House, a back book of the Black tone Back showing deposits of $1,700, a small sum of money, and also a piece of paper having a trunk key wrapped up in it, and on the paper was a writing stating that the key belonged to another trunk, which could be found at the house of a relative in Milron. This proved to be true, and this second truck was packed full of all sorts of fine wearing apparel, and contained also a key in a piece of paper, upon which was the statement that the key belonged to another trunk at a certain other house. And so this thing was followed up until twenty very large sized trucks and three buge packing chests were found, all crammed full of the most expensive articles of ladies' wearing apparel and housefurnishings that the Boston market afforded. When these truoks and boxes were all collected they loaded down a 4 ox team, and were drawn to a large hall in Mi ton, unpack ed and inventoried, preparatory to an audition sale for the benefit of the heirs. Among all these valuables were eighty nine dresses, new and perfect, made of silk velvet, satin and all kinds of plaid silks, black and colored thibets, poplius, alpacis, brilliantines, cashmeres, etc., three silk velvet cloaks, nineteen shawls from common to the richest Paisley and wrought crape, 106 shirts of all colors, 114 pairs of bose, undergarments too numerous to mention, table linen, towels, handkerchiefs, counterpanes, blankets, coverlets, sheets, live geese feathers, sets of elegant chinaware; a large lot of table and teaspoons of best coin silver, silver knives and forks, a fine gold watch and chain, and a large lot of fine jewelry, e.c.
